Student project for IE Business School, Corporate Entrepreneurship. Not affiliated with or endorsed by L'Oréal or ServiceMarket. Layla is a fictional composite; her scores are illustrative. Layla images generated with Gemini Omni Flash (Google) and listed in the AI log.

The idea in one line: we never show Layla's face. We show her hands, her hair, her phone, her home. The audience fills in the rest, and the speakers on the right talk straight to the CEO.

Format: 16:9. Split screen during the chapters: Layla or the app on the left (960 × 1080), the speaker on the right. Full screen for the cold open, chapter cards, the score and the closing card. Every speaker looks screen-left, towards Layla, and turns to the lens for the one line marked [LENS].

Visits: two home visits in twelve weeks, eight weeks apart, as in the prototype. Week 2 = visit 1 (chapter 3), week 10 = visit 2 (chapter 5). Weeks 0, 1, 4 and 12 happen at home without a visit: phone scan, booking, a quiet week, phone re-scan. Layla's on-screen line says "Visit 1 of 2" and "Visit 2 of 2" so viewers can count.

Partner (working assumption, team to confirm Fri 6 Nov): ServiceMarket, the operator for salon work outside the salon: a company that already runs home beauty visits in Dubai (booking, routing, insurance, payment) and knows the home-service permit process. The professional always comes from the partner salon; the permit sits with the salon and its named staff (FACTS.md, to verify with Dubai Municipality). That is the one piece L'Oréal can't build fast. If the team picks a different kind of partner on Friday, chapters 2–4 change; the rest holds.

Sound design (the whole film): one music cue that grows with Layla's twelve weeks, a few real sounds from her side of the screen, and silence where it matters. Nothing loud, no whooshes, no stock "corporate" beats.

Layer	What	Level in the mix
Voice	The six speakers, Studio Sound on, matched loudness	Always first. Target about –16 LUFS for the film
Music	One cue: felt piano, a slow three-note motif, over a warm low string pad. Develops: piano alone (weeks 0–1) → pad joins (week 2) → light movement (week 4) → strings rise (week 10) → one swell at 74 (week 12) → silence under the ask	15–18 dB under the voice while anyone speaks; can rise in gaps without speech
Week tick	One soft, dry clock-like tick on every chapter card. The same sound each time, so the weeks feel counted	Just audible
Layla's world	Room tone, air conditioning, a far-off city, and the small sounds listed per scene (phone, cup, comb, brush)	Low; under the music. Never over a speaker's words

Sources: Descript's stock music and sound-effect library (licensed for this use), or Agent Underlord ("add calm felt-piano stock music under the whole composition, ducked under speech"). Avoid recognisable sounds: no WhatsApp tone, no iPhone ringtones or haptics, no famous tracks. If the team uses AI-generated music, log it in `ai-log.md`. The raw Gemini Omni clips (`out/layla/*_raw.mp4`) have AI-generated ambient sound; usable as room tone, but then it is AI audio and must be disclosed.

#	Time	Left / full screen	Speaker	Words
Cold open	0:00–0:15	Layla, the first scan, 58	—	—
1	0:15–1:30	Week 0 · The gap	Amjad (C. Innovation)	176
2	1:30–2:45	Week 1 · Who, and why them	Ariel (C. Technology & AI)	177
3	2:45–4:00	Week 2 · How we work together	Qhakazile (C. Operations)	177
4	4:00–5:15	Week 4 · Why everyone wins	Rebecca (C. Marketing & Creative)	164
5	5:15–6:30	Week 10 · The pilot	Saja (C. Customer Experience)	175
6	6:30–7:50	Week 12 · The rules, and our ask	Ignacio (C. Financial)	183
Close	7:50–8:00	Closing card	—	—

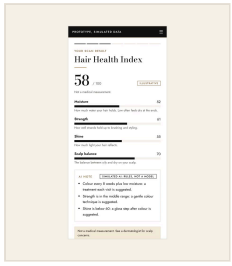

Why this order: each chapter goes to the role that would own that answer at L'Oréal. Innovation names the gap, Technology picks the partner, Operations runs the collaboration, Marketing explains the value, Customer Experience runs the pilot through Layla's eyes, and Finance sets the money rules and makes the ask.

Each speaker: about 170 words, read calmly. Time yourself: 65 to 75 seconds. Under 62 s and you risk the 1-minute rule.

0:00–0:15

COLD OPEN · 0:00–0:15 · FULL SCREEN

Layla, week 0 · the app lands on 58

PICTURE Black. Then a slow fade up: morning in a Dubai apartment, sheer curtains, the city soft behind glass. A woman's hand lifts a phone to the lengths of her hair. We never see her face. A thin light sweeps across the screen.

Cut to the app (p1): the number lands. 58.

ON SCREEN (Bodoni, white, one line at a time, centred low):

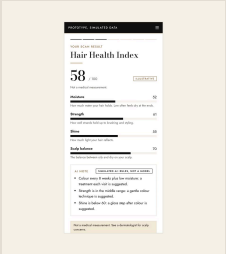

Layla. 34. Dubai.
She colours her hair every eight weeks.
No one has ever measured what it does to it.
Today her salon sends her a free hair scan.

SOUND No music yet. Room tone: the air conditioning, a far-off city through glass. A soft, generic phone tap as she starts the scan, then a faint rising shimmer while it runs. One piano note as 58 lands, left to ring. On the opening slate, the piano motif begins: three notes, slow.

Cut to the opening slate (4 s): "12 weeks with Layla".

The gap

CHAPTER 1 · WEEK 0 · 0:15–1:30 · Q1

App panel: Hair Health Index 58

CARD (3 s): Week 0 · The gap

LEFT Layla clip 1 continues, then the app panel: her score, 58, and the four bars.

ON SCREEN, LEFT, ONCE Week 0.

SOUND Week tick on the card. Piano motif alone, sparse, a long gap between phrases. Room tone stays under the Layla shots. Let the music thin out on "If it didn't work, she sees it" so the line lands in near-silence.

CHIEF INNOVATION OFFICER

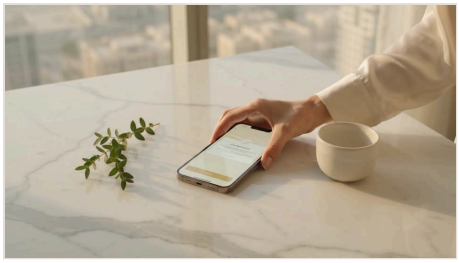

Amjad Saad Bensalamah

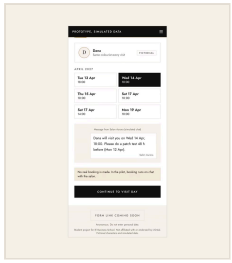

> Layla is made up. Everything about her is real.
>
> She's thirty-four, she lives in Dubai, and every eight weeks she colours her hair. Sometimes at the salon, sometimes with a box from the pharmacy. Both work. Neither tells her what's happening to her hair in between.
>
> That's what PRO·GO changes. A twelve-week care subscription. We measure her hair. A professional from her own salon comes to her home, twice. Twelve weeks later, we measure again. If it didn't work, she sees it. So do we.
>
> L'Oréal can do most of this already. The science, the products, the salons that already trust us.
>
> What we can't do is the hard part in the middle. Getting a licensed professional into a private home in Dubai, on time, insured, with the right permit. A home visit there needs its own permit, tied to the person who walks through the door. We've never run that. And Layla's living room is not the place to learn.
>
> So we won't build it. [LENS] We'll bring in someone who already does it, every day.

Editor: the line "If it didn't work, she sees it" sits over the 58. Hold on it.

Who, and why them

CHAPTER 2 · WEEK 1 · 1:30–2:45 · Q2

The booking · message from her salon

CARD (3 s): Week 1 · Who, and why them

LEFT Layla clip 2: the phone on a marble counter, a hand picks it up. Then the app panel (p3): the message from Salon Aurora. "Dana will visit you on Wed 14 Apr, 18:00."

ON SCREEN, LEFT Wednesday, 18:00. Dana, from my salon.

SOUND Week tick. Ceramic cup set down on marble; one short, soft message chime (generic, not WhatsApp) as the booking arrives; the phone lifted off the counter. Piano continues, a little warmer.

CHIEF TECHNOLOGY & AI OFFICER

Ariel De Silvio

Week one. Layla books her first visit. She thinks she's talking to her salon, and she is. But behind that message sits ServiceMarket.

ServiceMarket has run home services in Dubai since 2013, and since 2023 it belongs to e&. It says it works with more than 200 vetted partner companies, salon at home included. Think of them as the operator for salon work outside the salon. They already run booking and payment. In our pilot they would add the insurance and each salon's permit paperwork.

We looked at the two big beauty apps. Urban Company and Justlife send their own staff to your door. That would replace the salon.

ServiceMarket works the other way. It already sells other companies' services. The salon stays in front.

If Layla ever feels that an app replaced her colourist, PRO·GO is finished. Her colourist is the reason she says yes in the first place.

So our test for a partner was simple. [LENS] Do they make the salon stronger, or do they take its place?

ServiceMarket makes it stronger. That's why them.

Facts to verify before recording (sources in the list at the end): founded 2013; owned by e& since 2023 (ServiceMarket's own FAQ); 200+ partner companies and salon at home (company profile, ServiceMarket's claim, so "it says"). Urban Company and Justlife "send their own staff": check both sites once more.

Editor: on "behind that message sits ServiceMarket", the partner's name can appear in the lower left in Jost spaced caps, if the team approves using the real name.

How we work together

CHAPTER 3 · WEEK 2 · 2:45–4:00 · Q3

Visit 1 of 2 · her own colourist at home

CARD (3 s): Week 2 · How we work together

LEFT Layla clip 3: Dana's gloved hands section and comb Layla's hair, seen from behind; a plain ivory kit box on the side table. Slow drift, nothing hurried. Editor: add a small tag, Jost spaced caps, lower left of the panel: "FROM HER PARTNER SALON".

ON SCREEN, LEFT Visit 1 of 2. My colourist. My living room.

SOUND Week tick. A quiet doorbell or knock at the very start (the visit begins), then a fine comb through hair, the light stretch of a glove. The low string pad joins the piano here: the first time Layla is not alone.

CHIEF OPERATIONS OFFICER

Qhakazile Mathebula

Week two. Dana arrives. The same colourist Layla has trusted for years, now in her living room.

Three partners make that hour happen. The salon brings Dana and the relationship. L'Oréal brings the products, the measurement and the plan. ServiceMarket brings everything around the visit: booking, route, insurance, payment, and the permit paperwork for each salon.

The model is a paid pilot, not an acquisition. We pay ServiceMarket per visit, for ninety days. In return, we are the only colour subscription on their platform in our two communities during the test.

The data stays where it's created. Hair results stay with L'Oréal and the salon, with Layla's consent. Booking data stays with ServiceMarket.

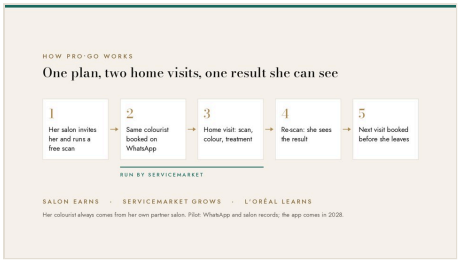

And the money has to work. Layla pays one subscription: our target is about AED 900 to 1,200 for twelve weeks, with two visits, the scans and her products. Our fee to ServiceMarket has to fit inside that.

If it works, we sign a longer deal and grow with them across the UAE. [LENS] But only after the numbers give us the right to ask.

Team to agree: per-visit payment and the exclusivity clause are Team D proposals, not facts. Subscription price AED 900–1,200 per 12-week plan = 2 visits × M3's target of AED 450–600 (frame 3 / D15, LOW); same as the prototype's plan totals (Essential 900, Signature 1,200 in price variant v1). Margin is still checked per visit (M2 KPI), against break-even about AED 420–500. The partner's fee must come out of the existing €3m lines (manual-MVP tools, legal and permits, visit delivery): Ignacio to check.

Why everyone wins

CHAPTER 4 · WEEK 4 · 4:00–5:15 · Q4

Service diagram (rendered): M3's five steps, ServiceMarket behind booking and the visit

CARD (3 s): Week 4 · Why everyone wins

LEFT The service diagram, the five steps of M3's "How it works", built one by one: Her salon invites her and runs a free scan → Same colourist booked on WhatsApp → Home visit: scan, colour, treatment → Re-scan: she sees the result → Next visit booked before she leaves. A thin line under step 2 and 3 reads run by ServiceMarket. As S4 names each party, a tag lights up: Salon earns · ServiceMarket grows · L'Oréal learns.

ON SCREEN, LEFT Week 4. Nothing to report.

SOUND Week tick. Calm, almost nothing on Layla's side: room tone only. As each diagram step appears, a very soft, low click (felt, not digital). Music gets a gentle pulse, the lightest movement of the film. "Nothing happens" should sound like a quiet, good week.

CHIEF MARKETING & CREATIVE OFFICER

Rebecca Fernandes

Week four. Nothing happens in week four. Layla uses her kit, the colour holds, and she doesn't think about us once.

That's exactly what we want. Because look at who's winning while she isn't looking.

The salon keeps a client who could have drifted to a box from the pharmacy. It earns on a visit it couldn't have made alone. Our target is ten percent more income for partner salons by 2030. And the professional stays theirs. We don't hire her. We never will.

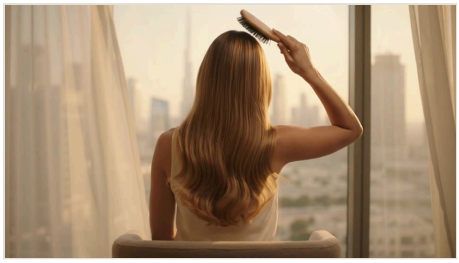

ServiceMarket gets something it can't buy. The name of L'Oréal behind it, and a door to salons it could never sign one by one.

And L'Oréal learns. For the first time, we see what our products do to real hair, in real homes, over twelve weeks. Not in a lab. Not in a survey. That is worth more than the margin on any single visit.

[LENS] Three partners, three different reasons to want this to work. That's why it holds together.

The pilot

CHAPTER 5 · WEEK 10 · 5:15–6:30 · Q5A

Visit 2 of 2 · week 10

CARD (3 s): Week 10 · The pilot

LEFT Layla clip 4: from behind, by the window, brushing. The light catches the shine. Then the app panel (p4, still to film): before 58, after 66, "Illustrative". Crop out the "Demo control" box.

ON SCREEN, LEFT Week 10. Visit 2 of 2.

SOUND Week tick. Slow brush strokes through long hair, curtains moving, the city far below. Strings rise a little under "the real numbers come from the pilot": the film starts to lift.

CHIEF CUSTOMER EXPERIENCE OFFICER

Saja Alowayshiq

Week ten. Dana's second visit, eight weeks after the first, and a second scan. This is where a pilot either teaches you something or just spends your money.

Here is ours. Dubai. Two communities, Downtown and Business Bay. Three to five partner salons. Ninety days, from the second quarter of 2027.

No new app at the start. We match each client to a professional by hand, on purpose. The app comes in 2028, after the test proves people want this.

One unit owns it: the PRO·GO venture unit, inside Professional Products. One leader, not a committee, with the salons and the budget. Your Innovation Board reviews it every quarter.

Every week we watch three numbers. How many book a second PRO·GO visit within ninety days. Whether each visit makes money after we pay the salon and ServiceMarket. And whether the hair score actually moves.

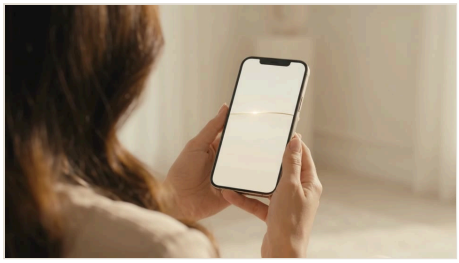

Layla went from fifty-eight to sixty-six by week ten. She's an example, so that number is illustrative. [LENS] The real numbers come from the pilot. That's the whole reason to run it.

Visit 2 falls eight weeks after visit 1, like her colour cycle and the prototype (14 Apr → 9 Jun).

Check: Downtown and Business Bay are "proposed" in the prototype config. Confirm.

The rules, and our ask

CHAPTER 6 · WEEK 12 · 6:30–7:50 · Q5B

Week 12 · re-scan, 58 → 74, illustrative

> CARD (3 s): Week 12 · The rules, and our ask

> LEFT Layla clip 5: two hands hold the phone, a blank ivory screen with a gold line rising. Editor: lay the 58 → 74 count on the phone screen, or cut straight to the score. Then full screen: the score graphic, 58 to 74, "Illustrative". The music lifts here, once. Back to split for the rules.

> ON SCREEN, LEFT Week 12. 74. She renewed.

> SOUND Week tick. A soft phone tap; the same scan shimmer as in the cold open, so the audience hears the loop close. As the score counts 58 → 74, faint ticks under the count, then the one music swell of the film on 74. Back to a steady, quiet pad for the rules. Music drops out completely on "So this is our ask": only room tone under the ask, and the last line, "Layla already did", in near-silence.

CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER

Ignacio Montero Alcantara

> Week twelve. No visit this time. Layla scans again on her phone. Seventy-four. And she renews.
>
> One Layla proves nothing. Three hundred would. That's our target for 2027.
>
> So we write the rules now, before we fall in love with the idea.
>
> We go ahead if at least forty percent book a second visit within ninety days, and every visit makes money. Then the next seven million euros are released at the Q4 2027 review, and we add salons.
>
> We change course if people come back but the money doesn't work. New price, new services, or a new deal with ServiceMarket.
>
> We fall back if salons won't send their colourists out. Then we test a salon subscription instead. Cheaper, safer.
>
> And we stop after two missed reviews in a row. Stopping early is cheaper than being right too late.
>
> [LENS, from here to the end] So this is our ask. Not a big bet. Ninety days in Dubai, inside the three million euros already planned. It buys proof, not volume. ServiceMarket at the door, the salon in the room, and your support.
>
> Give us twelve weeks. Layla already did.

Go / change / fall back / stop rule follow M3 frame 4 ("After the test we decide"). The 40 % repeat rate (second PRO·GO visit within 90 days), 300 clients, EUR 3m now and EUR 7m after the Q4 2027 review come from the M2 dashboard. "Buys proof, not volume" is the M3 CEO line.

Closing card (rendered)

CLOSING CARD (ink, one line, Bodoni, white):

Our ask: 90 days in Dubai, with ServiceMarket and our partner salons.

SOUND One second of silence, then the opening piano motif returns once and resolves on its last note as the card holds. Fade to black on the decay. Hold 5 s. Then the end credits, if the course needs them (team names, "Student project for IE Business School. Not affiliated with L'Oréal or ServiceMarket. Fictional characters, simulated data.
